Hotels Around The World

The English office is a Bedlam of noise and hurry at the moment and at the same time a place where you can walk and then spring up around the world, to reflect some interesting matters.

In most European hotels, for example, breakfast is all wet. You have to start a day ahead of time by innforming the maid to reserve the bathroom for you. Then, at the appointed hour, she calls for you in your room, grandly marches you and your town down the hall, and draws the water for you.

In Japan, they do a drop more to soft-soap their honorable guest-each bath provides a woman to wash you as well! But aside from these dubious extras, few hotels can offer an American abroad what he's used to here.

Only inn America, or an American hotel, can you be assured of modern conveniences. When travelers check into the more than 1,600 Holiday Inns in all fifty states and on every inn-habited continent, they can check out such luxuries and necessities as private baths, a swimming pool, a telephone, children under 12 free in their parents' room, television, good American and local food, ice, year-round temperature control, a doctor and dentist on call, free advance reservations, and free parking.

Wherever you go inn the world, it's nice to find a place with more comforts than home!

New Conservation Program to Be Explained In Mid-January

James R. Fore, Jr., Chairman, Appomattox County ASC Committee, said this regional meeting is a follow-up to the recent USDA announcement of the 1974 RECP operation and funding figures.

Mr. Ford said: "This new $90 million RECP program is one from which all Appomattox county residents can benefit. While cost-sharing under both annual and long term agreements is authorized in the RECP, there is an increased emphasis on tree planting."

American Cancer Society

The American Cancer Society predicts that about 218,000 Americans will be saved from cancer this year. On the other hand, 109,000 persons probably will die of cancer in 1974 for lack of early diagnosis and prompt, proper treatment, according to the Society's recently released publication "1974 Cancer Facts and Figures."

In its statistical report issued annually, the Society stressed three ways individuals can protect themselves against cancer:

1. Adopt preventive habits — avoid cigarette smoking, overexposure to sunlight and other known causes of cancer.

2. Have medical checkups annually, no matter how well one feels.

3. Learn cancer's warning signals and go to a doctor immediately if one should occur.

During 1974, it is estimated that 6,800 Virginians will die of cancer. In addition, there will be 13,000 new cases of cancer in Virginia. A breakdown of the major sites of cancer for the state includes 1,800 cases of breast cancer; 1,700 cases of lung cancer; 1,700 cases of colon-rectum cancer; 1,100 cases of uterine cancer; 1,100 cases of cancer of the prostate; 500 cases of oral cancer; 400 cases of leukemia; 400 cases of cancer of the pancreas; and 350 cases of cancer of the stomach.

Cancer deaths in Virginia will include 1,500 from lung cancer; 800 from colon-rectum cancer; 650 from breast cancer; 375 from cancer of the uterus; 325 from cancer of the prostate; 275 from leukemia; 250 from cancer of the pancreas; 225 from cancer of the stomach; and 175 from oral cancer.

Nationally, the Society estimates there will be 355,000 cancer deaths and 655,000 new cases of cancer during the coming year.

Daniel Reports

By W. C. (Dan) Daniel
Virginia Fifth District Congressman

WASHINGTON - Five days from now, the Congress will reconvene for the Second Session of the 93rd Congress.

It can definitely be anticipated that there will be a flurry of legislative activity in this Session. This is a traditional pattern, in the first place, because it is a Congressional election year. Additionally, much legislation under consideration has passed one body or the other, or is in conference.

One area which should command attention and action is campaign and election reform. And I mean reform, not cosmetic window dressing which will change little or nothing.

Two of the measures in this regard which have already passed the Senate are, in my opinion, not responsive to the abuses which need correcting.

The first of these provides for postcard registration, and thereby puts our electoral process in a class with the Captain Marvel Secret Decoder ring my son Jimmie Foxx used to send off for. There is need for improvement in the registration of voters. It should be made as simple as possible, and the postcard registration of voting registrant to avail himself of this privilege. But the use of this postcard opens wide the doors for abuse and manipulation, and should not be adopted. Then, too, if the prospective voter will not make the effort to register, what will be the value of election comes up? A shamefully low percentage of registered voters on a nationwide basis cast their ballots now.

The second Senate proposal has a peculiar history. When the bill to increase the debt ceiling which is considered virtually veto-proof was up before the Senate, provision for public financing of election campaigns was added as an amendment. The House stood fast on its rules of germaneness, and refused to consider this amendment when the debt bill came back, so the provision was removed. Now, the Senate Committee of jurisdiction has announced it will hold hearings on public financing early this year, and attempt to report out a bill. This is the best example I have seen lately of getting the cart before the horse.

Here again, I fail to see how this raid on the taxpayers' pockets to finance political campaigns can be considered a "reform." It has been demonstrated that illegal acts have been committed in campaigns, and have been financed, in some instances, with illegal funds. Public financing will not stop this practice. Any candidate who is so inclined could still engage in political espionage and sabotage. A soundrel will be a scoundrel. You cannot pass a law which will change this. You can pass a law which would make it too costly, in terms of fines and jail sentences, to make it worthwhile.

There should and must be limits on campaign spending, and on campaign contributions. There should be independent supervision and enforcement, and there should be more equitable access to political participation. But you do not reform the process simply by changing the source for financing it.

Currently, there is a great deal of talk about postal reform. The present system is not working very well, and all indications are the trouble is at the top, not in the localities.

Another minimum wage bill is almost guaranteed to be reported. In the past, overzealous Members have scuttled chances for improvement by insisting on unrealistic levels and applications.

Two bills which will directly affect people will deal with some sort of National Health Insurance and Pension Reform. These measures have worthy goals, but again, the anticipated costs do not reflect today's realities with an expanding budget and the likelihood of shrinking tax revenues.

A matter which is likely to come before the House is Land Use Planning. The Senate has already acted on this, and the appropriate committee of the House is drafting a different bill. Our nation was settled by world's dispossessed by men and women who were denied the right to ownership of property in a rigid European society. The right to be master of one's own domain - to won and control a piece of land, however small - is not a right American should relinquish casually.

These are only a few of the issues which will confront the Second Session of the 93rd Congress. It promises to be a busy year, and I am hopeful the people of the Fifth District will keep me fully informed of their opinions as legislation is developed. This is, after all, a representative democracy, and we should all work to keep it that way.

BOR Publishes National Recreation Trail Booklet

A booklet explaining the application procedure for National Recreation Trail designation is now available through the Government Printing Office, Bureau of Outdoor Recreation Director James Watt announced today.

Entitled "National Recreation Trails Information and Application Procedure," the booklet explains the urban-oriented National Recreation Trail concept of the 1968 National Trails System Act and criteria for trail designation.

National Recreation Trails, one classification of trails included in the National Trails System, provide for a variety of outdoor recreation uses on public or privately-owned land in or near urban areas. They may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior or, where national forest lands are involved, by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Bureau of Outdoor Recreation reviews all trail applications submitted to the Secretary of the Interior.

There are at present 42 National Recreation Trails in 22 States and the District of Columbia. These include braille trails and trails for the handicapped. Some trails are for hikers, bikers, and horse riders, while others are designated for snowmobiles and other motorized vehicles.

National Recreation Trail designation carries with it the prestige of the National Trails System but no direct financial assistance. Resultant favorable publicity could bring attention to the community, however, and help further outdoor recreation opportunities in the area and perhaps protect the trail itself from incompatible land use.

Study as if you were to live forever.
Live as if you were to die tomorrow.
